It was busy week down at the Shed last week with multiple activities taking place in the workshops and hobby rooms. As the Covid restrictions are relaxed and attendance at the Shed is picking up so the increased "rush-rush hurry-hurry work-work bang-bang" sound effects throughout the Shed are testament to the efforts being made to catch up on various projects, both personal and community oriented in the "to do" lists.

The series of photos show some of the guys involved in the various projects and activities going on in the Shed, during the past week.

Davie Ross and Murray Marshall, left, work on their own projects while sharing a bench in the workshop. Meanwhile, above, Peter Cooper lends his skills to “upcycling” a donated bike which will be sold in aid of Shed funds when brought to a safe and operable condition.

On the left, Bill Emslie shows his own garden bench undergoing refurbishment while, below, Bill Allan applies an oil finish to a garden table he’s been working on for a customer of the shed (the lady donated a pair of wrought iron bench ends to the shed to be used in a future project in exchange for the table refurbishment).

A number of tools were donated during the last couple of weeks and, shown below, Davie Ross goes through the carpentry tools, closely watched by Jim Mackenzie, Paul Tosh and Andy Lorimer. Tools are accepted by the shed on the understanding that if not considered fit for purpose they will be scrapped, or, if they are in good condition and surplus to requirements they will be sold in aid of Shed funds.

Bert Butchart, in the Mechanical Workshop reviews all the toolboxes and sorts out the various socket sets and spanners donated to the Shed.

Meanwhile, outside, Paul Tosh works away on a consignment of barrels that have been sourced by the Shed to refurbish the planter display up at the Railway Station, working alongside Stonehaven's Horizon Team.....watch this space.....

There are quite a few other jobs ongoing at the Shed but we don't want to hog all the space, and now that life is showing some signs of getting back to the "new normal", we'll try and keep you all updated on Shed happenings on a regular basis.

Oh, and someone has to clean up - in this case, Jim Mackenzie
